To Whom It May Concern,

Kerry Jenkins began working for me as my housekeeper in 18th October 2007. I soon realised that she had a lot more potential than the job required. In fact, one of my colleagues commented that Kerry was more of a PA than a housekeeper. This was mainly due to the fact that she was always willing to work beyond the call of her duties.

I have a rather large apartment, which is situated behind Puerto Banus. Therefore I need someone who is mature and experienced in this line of work.

As for the household duties, Kerry was reliable in all areas. As I work from home it is important that my house is clean and presentable at all times. I need to know that my house and my dog are in good hands, so I can fully focus on my business without any distractions.

One of her main responsibilities was to care for my old English sheep dog. As you may know a dog of this size requires a fair amount of care and attention. Kerry would often take him down to the beach in her free time, to ensure he would get the exercise he needed. (In addition to his regular daily walks!) As a puppy he needed someone who could be firm but kind. Kerry had both of these qualities, and I know he became very fond of her during her stay with us.

Another of her responsibilities was to cook lunch for my secretary and myself (and supper for myself). Kerry was very honest at the interview and made it clear that she didn't have much experience in catering for adults. Yet I was impressed with the eagerness with which she took the task in hand. As I'm not particularly fond of supermarkets, and I have a busy work schedule, I always asked my housekeepers if they could organize the shopping into one weekly shop. Even though Kerry also admitted her lack of experience in this area, she still managed it with ease and efficiency.

Finally, I would like to make one more important point. Since I have known Kerry, we have become good friends. Although she is no longer in my employment, I know I can rely on her as a friend. Many people struggle with the task of finding good house staff, and I included myself in this category. On occasions I have been left in the lurch by the more undesirable and unreliable types that one may find here on the coast. However, Kerry has proved to be a safety net on such occasions. Her loyalty as a friend never ceases to amaze me. Even in the times that Kerry has been rather busy with her own schedule, she has still managed to find the time to be there for me. In my eyes, this is what friends are for!

Therefore I would have no hesitation in recommending her for any job she should see fit to apply for. I know that she would be loyal, hard working and would give her best. If the position required certain skills that were new to her, I know Kerry would rise to the challenge with courage and determination.

Please don't hesitate to contact me if you have any queries about the above.

Sincerely,

Sunil Varma
